Purpose of this Handbook

The purpose of this Handbook is to provide general information to housing providers, applicants and tenants about the rights and protections that individuals with disabilities have under the law to ask for reasonable accommodations or reasonable modifications in residential housing.

These rights come from the federal Fair Housing Act (42 U.S.C. §§ 3601-19) and Oregon state statutes (ORS Chapter 659a). These laws cover any type of residential dwelling, including but not limited to:

- Publicly and privately owned rental units
- Dwellings governed by homeowners or condominium associations
- Retirement centers

We use the term rental unit throughout, but the same principles apply to any other type of covered residential housing.

This Handbook is not a substitute for legal advice. Federal and state law can change at any time. Contact Disability Rights Oregon or consult with an attorney in your community if you require further information.

What is the federal Fair Housing Act (FHA)?

The federal Fair Housing Act (42 U.S.C. §§ 3601-19) prohibits discrimination in housing practices on the basis of race, color, religion, sex, national origin, familial status, and disability.

Though the FHA uses the term handicap, we use the term disability, which has the identical legal meaning.

What is housing discrimination?

Discrimination is treating an individual or a group of people differently than other people under the same or similar circumstances, or denying an individual or a group of people benefits or privileges provided to other people.

The FHA prohibits housing providers from discriminating against people because of their disabilities in numerous ways.

PROHIBITED DISABILITY-RELATED DISCRIMINATION

- Prejudice based on an individual's disability or the disability of anyone associated with them
- Treatment of an individual with a disability less well than others
- Refusal to make reasonable changes to rules, policies, practices, and procedures needed because of an individual's disabilities

Housing providers cannot refuse to make reasonable accommodations that are necessary for an individual with a disability to have an equal opportunity to apply for or use and enjoy a rental unit, even if that means treating the individual with a disability differently. This covers all common areas, and any other included services and amenities.

For example, allowing a tenant's caregiver to access the laundry facility to do laundry on the tenant's behalf is a reasonable accommodation.

Housing providers must allow a tenant with a disability to make reasonable modifications to the structure of a rental unit or common areas. Sometimes, housing providers have to make the changes. Either way, the tenant has to have full use and enjoyment of the unit and other included services or amenities of the property.

How is disability defined according to fair housing law?

Disability is defined under state and federal fair housing law as a physical or mental impairment that substantially limits an individual in one or more major life activities.

EXAMPLES OF MAJOR LIFE ACTIVITIES

- Seeing
- Walking
- Climbing
- Standing
- Lifting
- Hearing
- Speaking
- Breathing
- Thinking
- Concentrating
- Interacting with others
- Self-care
- Learning

Individuals whose disability is the result of current illegal drug use are not protected, but individuals with a history of illegal drug use who are no longer using drugs are protected. Fair housing law prohibits discrimination against people solely because of impairments related to alcoholism.

What is a reasonable accommodation?

A reasonable accommodation is a request to make an accommodation or change in rules, policies, practices, or procedures to allow an individual with a disability an equal opportunity to use and enjoy a unit.

For example, waiving a no pets policy for an individual with a disability who requires an assistance animal because of their disability is a reasonable accommodation. See What is an assistance animal according to fair housing law?, p. 8.

Federal and state fair housing laws give both tenants and applicants who have disabilities the right to request reasonable accommodations in rules, policies, practices, or procedures from housing providers if the changes make it possible for them to:

- Complete an application
- Qualify for tenancy
- Have full use and enjoyment of the unit
- Comply with rental or lease agreements

These protections cover any type of residential dwelling, including publicly and privately owned rental units, dwellings governed by homeowners or condominium associations, and retirement centers.

What is a reasonable modification?

A reasonable modification is a change to the physical structure of a unit.

For example, installing a ramp for an individual who uses a wheelchair or grab bars in bathroom are reasonable modifications.

Federal and state fair housing laws give both tenants and applicants who have disabilities the right to request permission to make, or request the landlord to provide, reasonable modifications to the structure of the rental unit or the common areas.

If the housing is private, the tenant has to pay but the landlord must permit the alteration.

If it is a housing authority project-based Section 8 property or project-based Section 8 federally-funded housing, the landlord has to pay for the modification.

Who decides what is reasonable?

All accommodations and modifications have to be decided on a case-by-case basis, because determining what is reasonable depends on many factors.

In fair housing law, “reasonable” has been defined by the courts as an accommodation or modification that does not:

1. Cause an undue financial or administrative burden for the housing provider
2. Fundamentally alter the nature of the housing being offered

If I need a reasonable accommodation or modification, what should I do?

Make your request as soon as you find a need for an accommodation or modification.

A housing provider is only required to make an accommodation if they've been notified of your need. Individuals with disabilities are entitled to ask for reasonable accommodations at any time during the housing application process or during a tenancy, up to and including eviction proceedings.

You don't have to use the words “reasonable accommodation” or “reasonable modification,” but you do have to indicate that a change or exception to a rule, policy, practice, or procedure or a structural modification would help you more effectively use and enjoy your unit. See Model Letters #1-11, pp. 13-23.

Put all your requests in writing and ask for written responses, so that you have documentation in case there is a dispute later on in the process.

Housing providers can ask you to provide documentation from a professional, a statement that you as an applicant or tenant have a disability and that your disability results in one or more functional limitations. This is called a disability verification letter. See the Checklist for Disability Verification Letters, pp. 11-12.

EXAMPLES OF FUNCTIONAL
LIMITATIONS

- Inability to climb stairs
- Blindness
- Difficulty maintaining emotionally stability

The letter needs to state that the requested accommodation or modification is necessary because of your disability, and that it will allow you to enjoy the unit and any amenities or services included with the rental equally to other tenants, as well as to abide by the rules. In other words, a housing provider can seek information about how your requested accommodation or modification relates to your functional limitations and how the accommodation or modification will allow you to have equal access to the housing.

A housing provider cannot inquire into the nature or extent of your disability, or require you as an applicant or tenant to release your medical records.

Housing providers can require that the verification come from a qualified professional, but they cannot require that it be a medical doctor. Include a disability verification letter with your written reasonable accommodation or modification request even if you are not asked for one. You can have any professional familiar with you and your disability-related needs write the letter.

PROFESSIONALS

- Physicians
- Counselors
- Social service providers
- Pastors
- Case managers
- Psychologists

What is the interactive process?

Whether you are an applicant or a tenant, you and your housing provider should work together, engaging in what is called the interactive process. This means starting a dialogue and negotiating to come up with a solution that meets both your needs and the needs of your housing provider.

As the person with the disability, you are usually the best source of information on how to adapt the environment through accommodations or modifications that address your functional limitations.

Your housing provider is entitled to propose different accommodations or modifications they believe are less costly or administratively burdensome and equally effective in removing the barriers to your tenancy.

Is there a limit to the number of reasonable accommodation or modification requests I can make?

No. Under fair housing law, there is no limit to the number of reasonable accommodations or modifications you can request as an individual with a disability.

A housing provider has to consider each request on its own merits and agree to the request, unless the proposed reasonable accommodation or modification meets certain criteria.

CRITERIA FOR DENIAL OF REASONABLE ACCOMMODATION / MODIFICATION REQUESTS

1. Fundamentally alters the nature of the housing that is being offered
2. Poses an undue financial or administrative burden to the housing provider
3. Presents an actual, verifiable direct threat to person or property

The burden is on the housing provider to prove that one or more of the above criteria applies to deny a request.

If I use a wheelchair, do I have to pay a higher security deposit?

No. A person using a wheelchair for mobility is no more likely to cause damage to a unit than anyone else.

If you are a wheelchair user and you cause damage to your unit beyond regular wear and tear, regardless of whether the damage is the result of the wheelchair, you will probably have to cover the damage out of the standard security deposit charged to everyone.

Can a housing provider refuse to rent to an individual with a mental disability?

No. It is unlawful discrimination for a housing provider to refuse to rent to a person because of his or her disability, mental or physical, as long as they are eligible.

Who pays for reasonable accommodations or modifications?

Payment depends on whether the request is an accommodation or a modification.

REASONABLE ACCOMMODATIONS

- Both publicly and privately funded housing providers have to bear the cost of any expenses related to a reasonable accommodation.

REASONABLE MODIFICATIONS

- Publicly funded housing providers have to bear the cost of reasonable modifications, but in the private housing market the tenant bears the cost.

Can a housing provider require that a modified unit be restored to its previous condition?

Housing providers may ask that your modified unit be restored to its previous condition if the modifications make the unit less marketable.

Housing providers have the right to ask that the modifications be done in a professional manner.

For example, a landlord may require that bathroom grab bars be removed, but may not require that invisible extra supports put inside the walls to hold the grab bars also be removed. Doorways that have been widened do not need to be narrowed. You are not required to return a common area to its previous condition.

Are there rules about disabled parking?

Parking is an amenity. Housing providers are required to provide accessible parking for tenants who need it, and should have policies regarding approval for disabled parking. Make a reasonable accommodation request regarding parking just as you would for any other accommodation.

What is an assistance animal according to fair housing law?

Under state and federal fair housing law, an assistance animal performs functions for an individual with a disability that compensate for his or her disability-related functional limitations. Protection by fair housing law does require an assistance animal meet certain criteria.

CRITERIA FOR ASSISTANCE
ANIMALS

1. The person must have a disability.
2. The animal must serve a function directly related to the person's disability.
3. The animal must be necessary to allow the person to use and enjoy the housing.
4. The request for the assistance animal must be reasonable.

An assistance animal is not a pet or a companion animal and therefore is not subject to a housing provider's pet rules. For example, size or weight restrictions in the pet rules do not apply to assistance animals.

Under fair housing law, the terms assistance animal, emotional support animal, and service animal have the identical legal meaning. We use the term assistance animal.

What are some examples of assistance animals?

Most people are familiar with seeing eye dogs used by individuals who are blind. Signal dogs alert individuals with hearing impairments to sounds like smoke detector alarms and knocks at the door. Dogs often pull wheelchairs, pick up items and maintain balance for individuals with mobility impairments.

Cats, dogs and many other kinds of animals can provide emotional support to individuals with mental disabilities, alleviating anxiety, depression, stress and other symptoms of mental illness that can interfere with an individual's ability to live independently. It is necessary to demonstrate the relationship between an individual's ability to function and the companionship of the animal.

For example, an assistance animal offering psychological support to a person with post-traumatic stress disorder is equivalent to a caregiver providing housekeeping services to a person with an orthopaedic impairment that limits mobility.

Does an assistance animal need to be certified?

No. Under federal fair housing law, an assistance animal does not require certification or any kind of special equipment, identification or tags.

If I have an assistance animal, do I have to pay a pet deposit or any other additional fee?

No. Assistance animals are not pets under fair housing law and therefore a housing provider's pet rules do not apply.

Housing providers are prohibited from charging a person with a disability a pet deposit or fee in order to keep an assistance animal.

If your assistance animal causes damage to your unit beyond regular wear and tear, you will have to cover the damage out of the standard security deposit charged to everyone.

Is there a limit to the number of assistance animals I can have?

No. Under fair housing law, there is no limit to the number of assistance animals a person with a disability can have.

A housing provider has to consider each request for an assistance animal on a case-by-case basis just like any other reasonable accommodation request.

Housing providers are entitled to impose limitations with regard to requests for multiple assistance animals based on what is necessary for you to have full use and enjoyment of your unit.

Checklist for Disability Verification Letters

Individuals with disabilities requesting reasonable accommodations or modifications for their housing will in most cases need a letter written by a professional verifying their need for a reasonable accommodation or modification. This is called a disability verification letter.

The disability verification letter should include the following five items:

- 1. State all credentials and qualifications.

Example: I, [professional person's name] am a [physician, health care professional, other professional] and have the following credentials: [MD, MSW, PhD].

- 2. Explain the nature and duration of the relationship with the individual.

Example 1: I have treated [applicant or tenant's name] since [date]. I have evaluated and/or treated [applicant or tenant's name] [number] times in the last 12 months.

Example 2: I have not seen [applicant or tenant's name] in the last 12 months; the last time I evaluated and/or treated [him or her] was [date]. However, I believe [his or her] condition would not have changed.

- 3. Verify the individual has a physical or mental disability that substantially limits one or more of their major life activities. Examples of major life activities include seeing, walking, reaching, lifting, hearing, speaking, interacting with others, concentrating, learning, and caring for oneself.

You do not need to disclose a diagnosis. Keep the individual's diagnosis confidential with a statement verifying his or her physical or mental disability along with a description of their resulting functional limitations. That is legally sufficient to verify the need for a reasonable accommodation or modification.

Example 1: Mary has a disability that makes it difficult to walk and leaves her unable to carry items such as a bag of groceries or a basket of laundry more than 20 feet.

Example 2: Jim has a disability that makes it very difficult for him to maintain his emotional stability at a level that enables him to function independently in stressful or unfamiliar situations.

Example 3: Alberto's impairment makes it impossible for him to climb stairs.

- 4. Explain how the accommodation or modification is necessary to give the individual the opportunity for full use and enjoyment of their rental and all amenities. Relate the requested accommodation or modification to the individual's disability-related limitation(s) previously described.

Example 1: My opinion as Mary's treating physician is that Mary requires a designated parking spot next to her apartment so that she is able to do her shopping and other household tasks independently like everyone else.

Example 2: My opinion as Jim's mental health therapist is that Jim requires an assistance animal to keep him company and provide the emotional and psychological support he needs in order to live by himself in an apartment.

Example 3: As Alberto's physical therapist, my professional opinion is that he needs to be allowed to move to a downstairs unit that does not have steps.

- 5. If possible, state a willingness to give additional information to the housing provider as necessary, along with contact information.

Example: If I can answer any questions about Mary's functional limitations or her need for accommodations, please contact me at (123) 456-7890 from 10am until noon weekdays.
